The Governor's School of North Carolina -- East
Saint Andrew's College
Laurinburg, North Carolina
1999

Never Before...

Around the middle of April 1999 about 400 North Carolina students received letters telling them one thing: say goodbye to your summer. Friends began asking the usual questions: "What are you doing this summer?" "Are you going to work this summer?" "You're going to school this summer?" "Where?" "Laurinwhat?" The questions continued.

On Sunday June 20, 1999 the population of Laurinburg increased by 400. That was the day Governor's School East students found out they were not saying goodbye to their summer, but hello to a world of new experiences. GSE students came from such various ethnic, religious, social, and geographic backgrounds that some may have asked themselves, "How will I ever fit in?" Although everyone felt a little uneasy at first friends were easy to make. Soon everyone found their niche. It did not take long for GSE students to form bonds that will last a lifetime. New friends made being away from home seem like nothing at all. Whether it was feeding the turtles, going on a mind journey (a.k.a. sleeping), or just playing pool, everyone had a great time.

ART

Creativity in the Art World

Members of the Governor's School East art class of 1999 have engulfed themselves in guerrilla art and creativity. In a relaxed, productive atmosphere the art students have expressed themselves through various self-portrait interpretations. These decorated the walls of the Vardell Building. Under the guidance of their teacher, John Hancock, the artists of GSE '99 have created new styles by attempting to stray from tradition, but the art class is not all work and no play. When asked about the lighter side of the class, Lauren Winslow stated, "Two words: Adam Bloomfield." Well, at least they are original.

Choral Music

Vardell Voices

Wait! Do you hear those sounds coming out of the Vardell Building? They're not just sounds, they're the voices of the 1999 GSE choir. This choir has held many concerts incorporating the themes of humor, love, and faith. From pop to classical, they have sung it all. However, most of their music consisted of songs from the twentieth century. Under the direction of Dr. Gary Wright and Nancy Rice, the students have expanded their knowledge of the twentieth century musical period.

DANCE

Dancing Divas

As many of you have probably noticed, the dancers here at GSE are a rare sight. The long, grueling rehearsals showed the endless determination of each of these women. The immersion into twentieth century dance created a complete variation from the tap, jazz, and ballet most people are used to. After many hours of long, strenuous practices, and much sweat, the dancers' contributions to our guerrilla art experience was priceless. And who doesn't like girls in leotards?

DRAMA

The Theater Guerrillas

"It is acting without boundaries," Deirdre Pfeiffer says of the drama program at Governor's School East. It doesn't take a drama student to realize that, though. There was in-your-face acting with everything from morning radio shows to poetry readings to cones on the causeway. Their teachers, Eric Johnson and Anna Ward, were well prepared to give them a challenging summer. With activities like Director's Discourse and Viewpoints the students showed what they were made of. Director's Discourse was a once-a-week activity that entertained the rest of GSE with plays the drama students had written and directed themselves. The Viewpoints warm-up dealt with kinesthetic response in which each person on stage reacted to everyone else's movements, completely impromptu. For these theater guerrillas, it's first stop Laurinburg, next stop Hollywood.

English

Don't Take it Literally

English isn't just reading and writing anymore. This year's GSE English classes have done everything from filming skits to making life-size paper dolls. The three major topics were: "Poetry", "Not For Women Only", and "Southern By Birth, Yankee By Accident." Southern literature students did talk shows and southern meals. The feminist literature class studied past, present, and future stereotypes and ideas of women as seen in media and literature. You could often see a poetry student observing the scenery on the bridge. Although these are previously discussed topics, the conversations and ideas were truly original and cannot be replaced.

La Cour de Francais

Sitting in the cafeteria at dinner or walking along the causeway after class, many GSE students have heard the jabbering of an incomprehensible language which was not the chemistry students discussing the day's lesson. It was, very likely, one or more of the sixteen Francophiles who came to GSE to study "la langue d'amour"--the language of love. These brave students signed an agreement to speak only French in class. They also began having a French table at dinner for all students interested in conversing in the language. To gain a fuller appreciation of the culture, French movies and literature were viewed and discussed, popular songs were sung and heard, video projects and skits were created and performed, and personal narratives were written--all in French. Class parties and a trip to a French restaurant provided a taste of real French cuisine. Festivities were thoroughly enjoyed on Bastille Day, France's independence day. A class T-shirt was designed by the students, and even French "guerrilla art" was created in the form of a miniature Eiffel Tower constructed with aluminum cans. Clearly, the Francophiles enjoyed their six-week immersion in French culture.

Musical Interlude

Never before have fifty-five of North Carolina's top wind and percussion instrumentalists from the classes of 2000 and 2001 convened in one locale to be challenged by The Puckish Poltergeist, Pictures at an Exhibition, Finale, or even rehearsing for two and a half hours every weekday (slightly less during the weekends). Combining skill, grace, experience, and poise, the members of GSE's instrumental music department produced some of the best performed and most beautiful music heard by their peers. Under the guidance of instructors J Grymes,

Pam "Weasel" Halverson, Keith Jackson, Emily "Eeyore" Orr, and Kevin Streich, these instrumentalists were able to offer this listening opportunity in the form of two full band concerts, one small group concert, and daily evening lakeside serenades (a.k.a. outdoor practice sessions). During these six weeks the students exercised their musical prowess and immersed themselves in a world of adagios, legatos, staccatos, sforzandos, pianos, fortissimos, and marcatos.

Go Figure

Math students at Governor's School East had the opportunity to explore many topics over the six weeks. Classes varied from computer programming, an overview of Java script, to Combinatorics and Probability, the study of combinations, permutations, and probability. Matrix Algebra challenged students to master linear programming by hand and using the calculator. Advanced Problem Solving was an in depth course in practicing logic and strategy for solving non-routine problems. Students were challenged in and out of the classroom. Weekly math competitions, ciphering, and group research projects brought out the brightest and best mathematical minds.

Although excitement over math was masked by weary minds and bodies, epiphanies were not few and far between. Mathematics forced students to apply their skills to everyday problems, and through logic and reason approach a higher level of thinking.

Scientific Method

"How many people are there in natural science?" This was a common question asked by numerous GSE students after the typical introductory phrase, "What are you in for?" With seventy-two students, natural science did make up one of the larger areas of study at GSE. Students were allowed to choose two areas to study out of the three fields of biology, chemistry, and physics.

During the first three weeks of biology, all students participated in an ecological field study. Some students enjoyed the opportunity to spend their class time in the freedom of the outdoors collecting bugs and leaves, while others were not able to handle their freedom. "Ever since being kicked off the nature trail, my life has turned around. I have stopped talking outside and never again will I pick flowers and give them to girls," said David Dail. For the last three weeks, biology students were given a choice to study either genetics or biochemistry.

Students in the chemistry class spent most of their time in the lab performing experiments ranging from titration to making aspirin. Students decided making slime was by far the best lab.

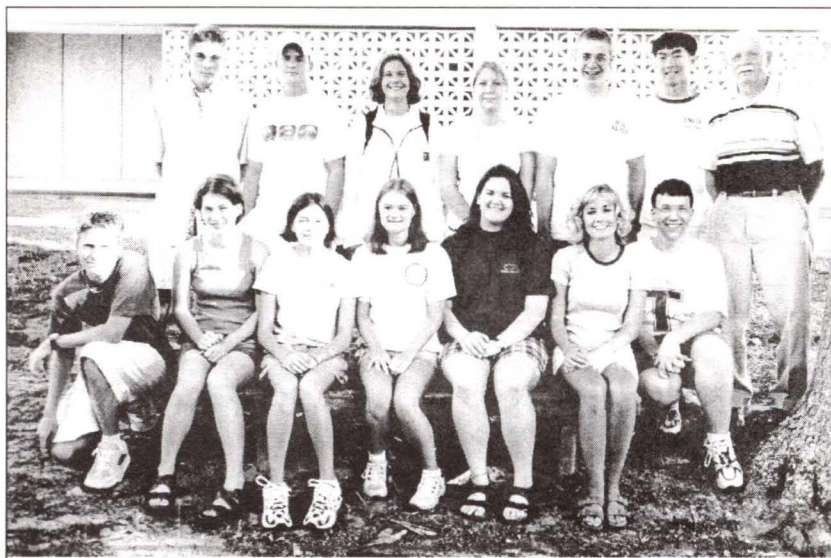

For physics, students studied relationships between matter, space, and time. They then put the theories they learned into practice. By building paper towers, students learned more about the center of gravity.

Whether examining bugs, playing with slime, or rebuilding crushed towers, the students of natural science were always busy with something. The Morgan-Jones Science Lab was always full of activity. This was the place where students learned science can be fun.

Socializing

"Come in with answers, leave with questions." This was the social science student's introduction to GSE. The students soon learned that they were the "hub of the wheel" at GSE, because all things relate to humanity--and social science. They began class by discussing the somewhat nebulous term of "social science," therefore defining their purpose.

The students were divided into two groups, attending both every day, with the exception of the third and sixth weeks when they stayed with their morning classes for both periods. Clem Brown's class began with a discussion of man's nature: good versus evil. The class progressed to study and debate the "conflict areas" of the modern world like the Arab-Israeli conflict and the Ireland dispute. Many controversial issues including gay rights and affirmative action were also discussed.

In Gary Shapiro's class, the social science students studied revolutionary documents, economics, and court holdings. In the third week the students did a film study on the role of the mother in this century and in the sixth week conducted a mock trial involving the dropping of the atomic bomb in the second World War. All through the session, students were encouraged to look at the nature of man and his search for certainties and empiricism.

AREA II

A Philosophical Adventure

What is reality? Why do humans obtain knowledge? What is the meaning of life? These and so many more questions are pondered and debated, though never answered, in the mere hour and fifteen minutes allotted for Area II, a measly three days a week. By description, the mysterious "Area II" is a basic, though non-traditional, philosophy class, but each class becomes so much more. Provocative conversation pokes and prods at each GSE students' brain, tearing away at old assumptions, asking each mind to examine values and beliefs set by upbringing, environment, friends, authority, and even their own preconceptions. Area II provides a forum for voicing opinions and individual thoughts, as well as giving students the opportunity to learn from each other. Each class is an interesting blend of traditional and avant-garde thought mixing students all the way from the mountains to the coast, each bringing their own spin to those unanswerable life questions. Area II is a unique opportunity to explore the "reality" of this world in an interesting, if not unorthodox environment.

"It's really interesting to learn more about yourself by exploring truth about reality as a whole."

-Marie Nance

"Area II makes you examine beliefs of people other than yourself."

-Eric Cuffe

"I really think that Area II is a very helpful course because it lets us analyze the things we take for granted that make up our society."

-Michael Gagnon

AREA III

In Area III, GSE students studied their relationship to society, as well as their own personal values and beliefs. Through personal anthologies, class discussions, mind journeys, and other activities they gained a sense of who they were and who their friends and classmates were.

Student Life

Everyday the students wake up, shower, dress and head off to 8:30 classes. When the teachers dismiss the last class of the day, what happens next? The topic of many conversations has been "What is there to do in Laurinburg?" That's where the students get creative. Anything goes in a place where students get excited about a shopping trip to K-Mart. Being away from home, the lack of parental supervision seems to make students go out on a limb. Dancing in the rain or guerrilla art on the causeway were frequent events in the daily life of students.

Friendships between the four hundred students began forming on the first day. As each day passed the students would see faces they had never seen before. Everywhere one turned there were marathon card games and friends sharing pizzas. Papa

David, Damian, and Nick replenish their daily supply. Pizza was a staple of student life.

The courtyard of Orange was never short of activity, including the luau of one rainy night.

John's and Domino's delivery guys became some of the most popular faces, due to the early dinner time and wonderful cafeteria food.

Students at GSE faced challenges they had never seen before. Dorm life was something most had never experienced. The students had to learn to do their own laundry, clean their own rooms, and not let their roommate lock them out. A variety of activities were planned for students on the weekends. Not only did parents come to visit, but movie trips, scavenger hunts, and dances filled the time. For those willing to brave the cold of Avinger, movies such as Patch Adams and Air Force One were shown.

Although life in Laurinburg was hot and hazy, there was never a lack of activity. Friendships grew strong, artists more creative, and students learned the value of a deep conversation.

The causeway is a place where there are always people gathering, especially in the minutes before classes.

Active guerrilla artists try to confuse students on their way to class.

Rollerblades and juggle sticks are just two ways to pass the time while waiting in line for a computer.

Independence Day

Some students passed the time by blowing bubbles on the steps of the Belk Center and avoided the chaos of the day.

The cafeteria staff did an excellent job with the spread for the cookout, which included delicious fried chicken, wonderful hot dogs, and the traditional watermelon.

The scavenger hunt involved a huge number of people that searched for various items such as a Backstreet Boys CD and three pieces of foreign currency.

"Did I get a package?" was the question running through most students' minds as they turned the combination on their mailboxes.

Relaxing on the causeway became a daily activity for those at GSE on the days it wasn't too hot.

The Orange dorm luau proved a bonding experience for many guys, no matter what dorm they lived in.

Creativity flowed with a new form of guerrilla art: body paint.

Students pass the time away between classes with conversation in the lobby of Morgan-Jones.

The tie-dye party was fun for all, and it was especially exciting to see how the shirts turned out.

Chillin' at Concord. A lot of students spent time hanging out in the dorm lobbies.

The ladies of Wilmington on their way to the pool. The pool was a favorite hang out for anyone worth their swimming trunks.

Cynthia Sopata is partaking in a favorite GSE alternative to the cafeteria food. The local pizza and chinese restaurants made a small fortune off of the GSE students this summer.

Jonas Swartz is welcoming people to the first Orange dorm luau. Luaus were thrown throughout the term, complete with tiki torches, by Orange Hall's suites 5 and 4 (the Alliance).

A group of ladies stylin' at the Orange luau. The luaus were started by Jonas, Robert, Billy, & Brandon of Orange Hall, suite 5.

Malcolm, Jeremy, Greg, Tyler, and Derrick play for keeps! Stratego allowed these govees to sharpen their mental skills. Tyler lost his shirt in the game, Greg lost his pants.

GSE students often fed the ravenous, mutated, killer turtles that lived in the dark, murky waters of the St. Andrews pond. These turtles coupled with the psycho geese made the mile long trek across the causeway that much more dangerous. In order to appease them, they were often fed our cafeteria food, not that we would have eaten the food anyway. Watch out for the small turtles though, they've got a temper.

Sports

Blood, sweat and tears. Other than the much-loved math contests, the most competitive part of Governor's School East was the sports. Many of the pupils who were restless with classroom pricklyness enjoyed the sports opportunities.

It all began at 6:30 in the morning when the usual crowd began jogging around the lovely St. Andrews campus. Then there was the rigorous, and occasionally fierce, basketball tournament. Soccer and volleyball shared time after supper. The Fourth of July marked the showcase of the softball players. All other times of the average govee's day were filled with pool, ping-pong, swimming, weight lifting, bowling and tennis.

Sports became the best alternative to K-mart treks and added hours of enjoyment to the GSE athlete.

Volleyball

Trey Barnette gets the ball skillfully over the net during one of the volleyball games. Many athletic players made the games quite interesting.

Sarah Craven blocks a hard shot from the staff volleyball team. The females out-performed the males many times in volleyball.

Only with grace and team-work does this team attempt to put the ball in play. A lot of GSE students formed friendships during the team sports.

Jonathan Patterson spikes the ball straight into the other team's gut. Jonathan's intensity helped him excel in all sports he participated.

Michael Galdo fights his opposition for a rebound in a tough game of basketball. It often took great strength to have any success in GSE basketball.

Sweaty bodies collide in a wrestle for a basket during one staff versus students game. Both teams performed well throughout the GSE season.

Basketball

Erika Mumau looks over her defender for a teammate cutting to the basket. Erika showed everyone that she could hang with the best.

Sarah Craven concentrates on making an important foul shot. The skillfulness of all the girls created very competitive match-ups.

Anthony Palermo swats a backhand winner in one of the tennis matches. Some students proved to be incredible tennis players.

These tennis pros pause from the incredibly hot courts to get a group shot. Obviously, the tennis group used all available time to play.

These two girls "serve" their friend with an overhead splash.

Tennis

Softball

Lani Golstab stands in the outfield ready for anything hit out there. She made many heads-up plays.

David Sugimoto takes the pitch straight outside the park. Many players were amazed by David's performance.

With great ease, Amanda Whitehurst carefully hits a tough pitch. Softball was fun for both sexes during the July 4th game.

Megan Burrows sends a blistering pitch past the batter. Her poise sent many hitters back to the dugout.

Soccer

These players attempt to gain control of the ball in one soccer game. The games often became quite competitive and enjoyable for all.

Joel Cohen glides past the defender with a slight, deft touch. Joel used his great skill to help lead his team to victory.

Virgil Mueller prepares to get his team in attacking position with his intelligent play. He was often seen streaking down the sidelines with great flair.

Ben Goodhart looks to take a hard shot past the keeper. Many GSE students showed that they had incredible skill with their feet.

Governor's School is a flicker of brilliant light that illuminates the dark night sky for a brief bright moment, then is lost save in our busy minds. It is the walk across the causeway to the tempo of water wafted notes of woodwinds stationed on a promontory, the quiet reverie of pen to paper as a life-shifting line scrawls onto a soul's anthology, the shy couple hand by hand heading for the lone lost moment of hopeful love, the crowds wild roar as Croc the elegant clown trumps the highest card anyone could play on that brassy instrument, the eye that vowed no tears heaving hard at slides of joyous days gone by. All of this is '99, our splendid summer.

We felt the days creep by so slow at first we knew a Wednesday could never come. Then Einstein played a trick as time itself was beaming us on to sudden Saturday where we would be gaveled into doom.

Come again? Oh no, you can't go home or here again. But for the rich realm of silken snapping synapses, we would be utterly lost. There in that neural ebay of summer's wonders, we all do summon us, and in this small memorial trove, give back the gold again.

"I had a great time" just doesn't quite describe it. Though it is impossible to capture the complete experience of Governor's School in a phrase or even in the pages of a book, it is possible to capture the memories.

We started out dreading the idea of school all summer, but now we will have to explain to our friends back home just what makes this school so special. In the past six weeks we have opened our minds, challenged our beliefs and allowed ourselves to grow. Throughout all this "growth" we still managed to have a little fun: playing sports in stifling humidity, having pizza delivered almost daily, trekking to Harris Teeter for anything and everything, dancing incognito at the masquerade ball, tie-dyeing our T-shirts and various undergarments, party-hopping from dorm to dorm, and generally making Laurinburg a bigger dot on the map. Never before have we had days as enlightening as these; never again will we appreciate K-mart and Mom's cooking so much.

This book is your record of an adventure unlike any other, but without your memories it's just blank pages.

...Never Again

Special thanks to Saint Andrews Presbyterian College for their hospitality and continued commitment to the Governor's School of North Carolina.

A BIG thank you to Michael Parsons for all of his help on the computer.

Causeway

I sit alone now on the causeway
 The sound of a distant tenor sax
 Mingle with the calm breeze
 I am surrounded by Artists and Thinkers
 Dancers and Scientists
 Writers and Musicians
 The art, the ~~poetry~~ <sup>taste</sup>, the rhythm is so thick
 You can ~~take~~ it and swallow it.
 And you're so hungry for it
 That you can feel it run down your throat
 And hit your stomach.
 But I'm not resting on the George Washington Bridge
 Looking down over Harlem.
 I'm in a place where the talented and the brilliant
 Come to shine.
 Where they dance without words and sing in numbers.
 Here we are celebrated; here we are praised.
 So, glory be to God for Celebratory Things.
 - Abigail Clarke-Sayer

Special Thanks To Melinda Powers, Yearbook Advisor and Publicity Director:

Thanks for all of the laughs and fun. A big thanks for your patience when we invaded your office at wierd times during the day.
